3. Management's Strategic Response to the Environment: The second stage of the model focuses on management's strategic response to the environment. The model assumes that management's response is shaped by the organization's internal characteristics (e.g., size, structure, and culture) and the external environment (e.g., industry, market, and society). Management's response is categorized into three types: (1) Proactive, where management anticipates and acts on environmental changes before they become a problem; (2) Reactive, where management responds to environmental changes after they have become a problem; and (3) Adaptive, where management adjusts its strategy to fit the environment over time.
